Agentic AI is no longer a pilot programme. It is production infrastructure — and the businesses that move now are already 12–18 months ahead of those still evaluating.

Our research across 20 sources from Gartner, MIT Technology Review, Deloitte, and PwC tells a consistent story. Multi-step autonomous workflows have crossed the threshold from experiment to operating reality. Gartner forecasts 40% of enterprise applications will include task-specific AI agents by end of 2026, up from under 5% a year earlier. The agentic AI market alone is expanding from $7.6 billion to $10.8 billion this year.

For SMEs — particularly in MENA — the timing has never been better. AI integration costs have dropped 80% in three years. The UAE leads the world at 70.1% AI adoption, and regional governments are actively incentivising the shift. SMEs here are not catching up. They are early movers with structural tailwinds: younger workforces, lower legacy costs, and government programmes clearing the path.

The real risk in 2026 is not moving too fast. It is moving too late — and spending the next 24 months trying to close a gap that compounds every quarter.

What is holding your organisation back from making the move?

Is your business keeping pace with the AI shift happening right now?

The data is clear: AI integration for SMEs now costs 80% less than it did three years ago, and businesses that have made the move are reporting returns of more than £5 for every £1 invested. In MENA, the UAE already leads the world in AI adoption.

The question is no longer whether AI is ready for small businesses. It is whether your business is ready for AI — because your competitors are not waiting.

What would you automate first if you could start today?

AI is running businesses. Is yours one of them?

- Agentic workflows now replace what used to take entire teams
- AI integration costs dropped 80% in 3 years — the barrier is gone
- MENA leads: UAE at 70.1% adoption, the highest globally

The window is open. It will not stay open.

Start now.
